- use primary and secondary sources to independently construct an original historical interpretation: demonstrating competency in identifying a problem, posing a hypothesis, proposing a methodology, offering an interpretation of the evidence, and making an original contribution to scholarly debates;
- compose and present clear, well-organized, properly documented, and grammatical prose in a form appropriate for scholarly publication;
- appraise alternative readings of the past and connect them to their research in new holistic interpretations that offer new avenues for research or application to other studies;
- apply the ethical standards that govern the practice of public history in their scholarly and professional work (public history emphasis only);
- demonstrate the ability to execute a public history project (public history emphasis only);
- demonstrate the ability to interpret history for public audiences (public history emphasis only);
- demonstrate the ability to collaborate on a public history project (public history emphasis only).

The courses offered for this program are the same as for the already existing BA and MA programs. All that will differ is the recommended order of enrolling in the courses as well as the allowance of 9 MA student credit hours to count toward the BA (substituting for History 301WI, History 498WI, and one 300/400-level elective). Please note that the BA/MA with Public History emphasis requires much of the same coursework as the BA/MA with the exception of dedicating MA elective courses to public history coursework and 200 hours of fieldwork. Please contact the History Department for sample degree plans for the BA/MA and the BA/MA with Public History emphasis programs.
